

The 'M' Drill for defense

Provided by Coach Bill Cranston

For Active.com

April 25, 2006

Purpose: The M drill is primarily a defensive drill. You will need 5 cones to set this up.

Setting up the drill

The shape of your cones will eventually form an 'M.' Numbers 1-5 represent the different turns in the M shape, with one and five being the starting and stopping points if you were actually writing the capital M. The distance between cones 1 and 2 should be roughly ten yards. The distance from cones 2 to 3, and cones 3 to 4 should be five yards. Finally, the distance from 4 to 5 should be ten yards.

Quick turns

All cones are set at an angle to provide quick acceleration forward to quick hip turns in the back pedal. On a coach's whistle, a player will begin his movement around the cones. From Cone 1, the athlete will back pedal to 2. Next, they are to run to 3 while turning their hips towards 4 (facing towards coach). As the player reaches cone number 4, coach throws ball to player with player returning ball at full speed to cone 5.

A valuable tool

This drill is good for technique but also is a valuable tool in DB communication before and after an interception. Coaches should always check for hip turns at cones 2 and 4. This drill can and should be run in reverse.

This tip was provided by Coach Bill Cranston.

For more football news, tips and tools, visit eteamz, your online team sports community.

Copyright © 2006 Active Network