

As God's Creation

As humans we are all creatures of God. God gave us superiority and priority over other creation of God as well as free will. (As humans we are the only creatures that can choose right from wrong.) But with these blessings comes a responsibility. All creatures must be treated equally, and as stewards of God's creation it is up to us to make sure that is honestly, and efficiently done. In this essay you will read examples of how we are successfully and unsuccessfully doing this, as well as how we could do better in the areas we are lacking progress in.

If you, a loved one, or anyone was starving to the point that he or she was dying, and all there was to eat was a creature on the endangered species list you would probably eat the creature or feed to the other starving person, wouldn't you? Of course you would, and don't even try to tell me you wouldn't because you would. Why though? That is where we instinctively prioritize, the humans natural prioritization as well as the correct one is as follows; humans, in order to be good stewards of God's creation we must take care of ourselves first, plants and animals come next because these are the things that we have been born to take care of. In the paragraphs following you will read examples as to how we are correctly and incorrectly prioritizing these things.

Global warming is a good example as to how we are in some cases wrongly prioritizing, in others correctly prioritizing, and how in some cases we are at a neutral. Part of global warming is the polluted air which is caused by human habits and products, and effects the crops grown, which effects the currency, which finally effects the human birth rate. On the down side, more and more people are turning to abortion because, crops are bad which makes good fruit and vegetables more expensive which means a lot of families cannot afford another mouth to feed so they abort there child before he or she is born. This is putting the needs of the environment before the most precious gift in the world human life. Where we are neutral is our toxic products, we are neutral on a technicality our toxic products such as hair spray and air freshener are not putting the needs of animals first, but these products do not need to be so toxic. Air freshener could be made of natural things such as orange peels and water, hair sprays could just be water mixed with egg whites. That way we could be using the things we want without being harmful to the environment. (Plus egg whites are good for your hair.) On the up side we are paying more and more attention to what we compost, recycle, and throw away which is helping us as well as animals because we do not need to spend as much on buying new things, and we humans do not suffer from taking one extra minute to separate our trash. We are also discovering ways to use energy without all the harmful bi-products such as smog and more trash for harmful landfills, we are instead using wind, sun and water to power everyday things such as cars, and house hold lighting.

Over use of the death penalty is also another good example of false priority. The message of the death penalty is because killing is wrong and because you killed that man we are better then you we shall murder
